We have something new in our country- a beloved post office under the control of US postal governing people who seem to look at it as something that seems not to matter to many citizens. I would like to express my concern because I have heard that there are plans under the present US Postal leadership that would make it even worse than it has become under their guidance.

I live in a predominately rural county which has one of the largest, if not the largest, elderly populations in the state. I have noticed that my mail takes several days longer to reach me. There are repercussions. For example yesterday I was advised that my newspaper subscription had expired even though I had mailed in the check by return mail after being advised that my subscription would soon expire. The overlapping loops involved in basically eliminating useful postal service are overwhelming to those of us who are elderly and disabled and rely on a well-functioning postal service. Our postal workers are overworked and dispirited. We lose our identity and also our collective identity when the USPS is used in a cavalier manner.

Perhaps we should call out the person who began this self-righteous (and self-serving) diminishing of something sacred. The people entrusted to power in the Post Office should be called to account.

Very truly yours,

Sandra Rouverol
